Program for
Special Education
Pregnant Students*

Pregnancy Related Services (PRS) and Special Education Services are support systems, including Compensatory Education Home instruction (CEHI) that a student is entitled to receive during the pregnancy prenatal and postpartum periods to help her adjust academically, mentally, and physically and stay in school. These services are delivered to a student when:

- ❖ The student is pregnant and attending classes on a district campus,
- ❖ A valid medical necessity for confinement during the pregnancy prenatal period prevents the student from attending classes on a district campus, or

- ❖ A valid medical necessity for confinement during the pregnancy postpartum period prevents the student from attending classes on a district campus.
- ❖ A pregnant special education student's Admission Review and Dismissal (ARD) committee and PRS program staff must collaboratively address the student's service needs.

The district will offer CEHI services, (2 hours) as well as special education services (4 hours), as part of the student's program. See 9.12 PRS and Special Education Services (SPED).
